Mercury Reaches 107 Monday

GENERAL RAIN SWEEPS THRU MIDDLE WEST

Predict Relief From Scorching Weather; Two Die In Columbus From Heat.

Circleville went through one of the hottest nights in its history late Monday and early Tuesday when the official thermometer registered over 100 degrees through the entire night. Early risers Tuesday, and there were plenty of them, were treated with sight of feet sticking out of upstairs windows and of residents hurriedly re-entering their home after seeking relief from the heat on front and rear porches.

It seemed that the only breeze prevailing Monday night were hot ones, for everyone Tuesday appeared only half awake after spending a restless night.

Monday's temperature reached a mark of 107 degrees at 3 p. m. and was the second highest to be registered during the year. Two weeks ago the mercury reached a new high of 109 degrees.

At noon Tuesday the thermometer showed 100 degrees and, although there were slight breezes during the day, it was expected the mark reached would be nearly the same as Monday.

PREDICT RELIEF
COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 5.—Slightly cooler weather came today as a welcome—even if only a temporary—relief to sweltering Ohioans.

At 10 a. m. today the official thermometer at the local United States weather bureau registered 86 degrees, compared with 90 degrees at the same hour Monday.

U. S. Weatherman Alexander explained that a moderate area of cooler weather spreading eastward, reached the Buckeye state this morning. He expressed belief that today's maximum temperature would not exceed 93 or 94 degrees. Monday's highest reading was 97 degrees on the official thermometer. This was at 4 p. m. At the same hour, however, the heat on the street level had reached 102 degrees.

No rain is in sight for today in Ohio, according to Alexander. He does not expect any rain in the Buckeye state before Wednesday afternoon, if then.

Today's official forecast calls for partly cloudy weather tonight and Wednesday with possible local showers Wednesday.

Deaths of two local citizens, Mrs. Ellen Lore, 51, and John Andrew Brookhaven, 78, composer and music teacher, were indirectly attributed to the heat wave.

Columbus residents today emerged from one of the hottest nights of the year. At 2 a. m. the official reading was 82 degrees, compared with 77 degrees at the same hour Sunday night and 57 degrees at the same time one year ago.

RAINFALL IN WEST

By International News Service
A general rainfall throughout the middle west brought welcome relief to that section of the heat scorched, drought-parched United States today while the weather bureau indicated similar relief might be expected soon throughout the country.

Nebraska, in the heart of the corn belt drought area, found instant relief last night when an unexpected cloudburst loosed nearly seven inches of water on its arid farms and gardens.

Lesser, but equally welcome rainfalls were reported in other corn states while Chicago literally gloried in brisk steady showers which followed a night of refreshing lake winds. St. Louis and Kansas City reported their first appreciable rain in days, today with the resultant drop in temperature.

Oklahoma, Arkansas and Kansas farmers saw hope for their crops in the rain which fell there during the night and was expected to continue throughout most of the day.

GLOBE FLYERS AGAIN IN AIR

Lundgren and Stiler Take Off From Amarillo, Texas, For New York.

AMARILLO, Tex., Aug. 5.—In search of a new globe-girdling record, Ted Lundgren and W. L. Stiler, of Los Angeles, took off from the municipal airport here at 6 a. m. for New York.

The flyers dropped down here last night after being overtaken by darkness which forced them to shorten the first leg of their round-the-world flight by several hundred miles. Original plans called for an initial stop at Kansas City.

They expected to fly to New York today without a stop.

JULY BREAKS CO-OP MARK

Increase Over 1929 Is 90 Per Cent; Over Million Pounds of Stock Handled.

The month of July, 1930, was a record breaking month for handling livestock by the Pickaway Livestock Cooperative Association according to reports, compiled by H. J. Briggs, manager.

The report shows that during the past month 1,304,530 pounds of livestock has been handled by the association representing a total of $113,503.33, or an increase of 90 percent over July, 1929.

This report shows that this number represents 80 decks of livestock classified as follows: 2,523 hogs, 809 cattle, 197 calves and 656 sheep.

In December, 1929, a record breaking report similar to this one was also reported by the association.

LUTHERANS MEET IN JOINT SYNOD

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 5.—Approximately 250 officers and delegates of the Evangelical Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio and other states and Canada today are attending the final synodical convention of this organization. Sessions are being held in St. Paul's Lutheran church. The organization, which is 112 years old, is holding its 49th convention.

Losing its identity at this convention, the synod, representing more than 250,000 members, will merge with the Evangelical synod of Iowa and the Buffalo synod. The merger organization will be known as the American Lutheran church.

The general synodical organization will hold its initial session Wednesday.

Kiwanians Are Boys For Night At Scout Camp

Enjoy Evening as Guests of Troops of This City and Williamsport.

Members of the Kiwanis Club became boys again Monday evening and had one of the treats of the past several years when they were entertained at Camp Williamsport near Darbyville on Darby Creek by the Boy Scouts of the Circleville and Williamsport troops.

The men enjoyed a campfire dinner Monday evening and took part in games along with the rest of the "kids". Two of the biggest "kids" at the camp were Sam C. Grant and C. E. Hill. Grant made a catch in the outfield during a recreation ball game that would have done credit to none other than Tris Speaker. The only difference was that Grant came mighty near breaking his neck.

Hill proved to be a Gordon Cochrane behind the plate, and even went so far as to reach out from behind the plate to catch balls before they reached the bats of the youths.

Everyone had a great big time during the entire evening.

MAN ARRESTED HERE IS HELD

Mearl Smith, 42, Former Convict of Columbus, Questioned in Wife's Death

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 5.—Frotesting his innocence, Mearl Smith, 42, garage owner and former convict, today underwent additional grilling at the hands of police officials here relative to the death of his wife, Hazel, 36, who apparently was killed in an automobile accident in a lane 2 1-2 miles north of Harrisburg, July 29.

Smith has been grilled more than 14 consecutive hours. Mrs. Smith's lifeless body was found beneath the wreckage of her car. Coroner J. A. Murphy said she had been accidentally killed.

Although he told conflicting stories, according to police officials Smith held fast to his claim that his wife was alone in the auto when she was killed. Policemen, however, state that witnesses disagree as to whether Mrs. Smith was alone in the car.

Smith served 18 months in Ohio penitentiary for highway robbery of a Lockbourne store in 1917. He admitted serving several workhouse sentences and was arrested, but later released in connection with a robbery at Circleville.

INFANT DIES

The body of the stillborn infant daughter of John and Esther Penix Crawford was interred in Forest cemetery Tuesday by M. S. Rinehart. Besides the parents five brothers survive.

HOOVER'S FARM RELIEF PLANS BEING TESTED

Voters of Four States Trek To Polls In Fights Creating Wide Interest.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—The Hoover administration's plan of farm relief and prohibition were put to the test today as voters of four states—Virginia, West Virginia, Kansas and Missouri—trooped to the polls in the first of a series of important primary elections during the torrid summer season.

The eyes of political America turned to the west, where Kansas voters will decide important issues after the most turbulent primary campaign in years.

The administration's $500,000,000 farm relief plan as administered by Chairman Alexander H. Legge, and others of the federal farm board has furnished most of the ammunition for Governor Clyde Reed, who is staging a hard fight for renomination against Frank Hauke.

The Kansas governor has bitterly assailed the farm board's plea for a reduction in crop acreage. Although Governor Reed has in the past been a firm supporter of the Hoover administration—even appointing a senator on the ground that he would uphold the president—he has gone so far in his attacks on the farm board that he is regarded by many politicians as a rebel in the Republican camp.

CAREER UNOPPOSED
Both Kansas Senators—Capper and Allen—are up for renomination. The former has no opposition, and Sen. Allen is fortunate in having three candidates against him. They are Rep. Sproul (R.) of Kansas, known as one of the driest of the dries, W. G. Snyder, a "farmer's candidate," and James F. Getty. Allen is expected to win.

Virginia, however, is furnishing a prohibition test that is being eagerly watched. It is in Washington's "back door," in the district just across the Potomac where George Washington lived.

Rep. R. Walton Moore having decided to quit congress, there is a general scramble for the Democratic nomination in this, the eighth district. There are five candidates, two dry and three wet. State Sen. Frank Ball of Arlington County and Judge Howard W. Smith of Alexandria are the dries, while Thomas R. Keith of Fairfax, Crandal Mackey of Arlington and E. H. DeJarnette of Orange County bear the moist label. Keith, a candidate of acknowledged high caliber, is given an outside chance, with Ball favored to win.

Mrs. Sarah Lee Fain, a Virginia beauty who turned from social life to politics, is fighting Ex-Rep. Deal for the Democratic nomination. Deal was unseated in the Hoover landslide, partly because he was a wet. His defeat was acclaimed an Anti-Saloon league victory.

Ex-Sen. Neely will be nominated for the senate by the Democrats in West Virginia, while there is a scramble for the Republican nomination.

Five candidates want the Republican nomination for the seat made vacant by retirement of Sen. Guy D. Goff, Republican. One of the five candidates, Benjamin L. Rosenbloom, is running as a wet. The race for the Republican honor appears to be between Col. James E. Jones of Switchback, and Harry Shaw of Fairmont.

Missouri voters are engaging in congressional primaries, having no senatorial candidates to name.

LADDER STOLEN

Frank Marion, of the firm of Barnes and Marion, who are doing some construction work in the rear of the American Hotel, reported to the police department Tuesday morning that some thief stole a 14-foot ladder from behind the hotel some time Monday evening. MINERS HURT IN EXPLOSION

Scores Escape Uninjured As Mine in Pennsylvania Is Wrecked By Blast.

VANDERGRIFT, Pa. Three mine workers were injured, one probably fatally, and scores escaped uninjured today when the West Penn mine at Apollo, near here, was partially wrecked by a terrific gas explosion.

Joseph Shlosky, 32, was the most seriously injured, suffering severe burns about the face and body. He was rushed to Citizens General hospital at New Kensington where attaches said his recovery was doubtful.

Bert Ashbaugh, 23, and George Morrow, 27, also were painfully but not seriously injured. They suffered lacerations of the face and body. Hospital attaches believed Ashbaugh and Morrow also had suffered from inhalation of gas fumes.

More than fifty men were in the mine, owned by the Conesmaugh and Kiski Coal Company, when the blast let go but all, with the exception of the three injured men, made their way to the surface unhurt.

Officials of the mine expressed the belief that the explosion was caused by open carbide lamps, used by the men, contacting with and igniting a gas pocket in the colliery.

CHILD DIES AFTER 5 WEEKS' ILLNESS

Dr. A. L. Stump and Miss Helen Bartholomew were visitors in Williamsport Tuesday, and in Ashville Wednesday.

GUARDS SHOOT FED. EMPLOYEE

Coastguards Mistake Powerboat For Run Runner, Fire 50 Rounds of Bullets.

IPSWICH, Mass., Aug. 5.—A coastguard picket boat from Base No. 7 at Gloucester, mistaking the surfer powerboat of the Plum Island station on an errand of mercy to a run running craft, riddled the small craft with nearly fifty rounds of machine gun fire, killing Boatswain's Mate Louis A. Pratt, 30, of Kittery, Me.

This admission was made today by coastguard headquarters in Boston after the belief had been expressed by authorities here that Pratt had been the victim of gun fire from a liquor smuggling craft in the semi-fog.

The fact that run running speedboats had never been known to carry machine guns led to inquiry along the shore stations with the result that the fatal mistake of the coastguard picket boat was revealed.

According to the new official version of the sea tragedy, a Plum Island camper notified Coastguard station No. 21 at Plum Island that two Winthrop men were adrift off the mouth of the Ipswich river.

Pratt and Cleo Frothingham, of Jonesport, Me., coastguard surfman, put out into the midnight semi-fog to the rescue, off Knobs Island, near the mouth of the Ipswich river, a sudden hail of bullets, accompanied by the rattling of the machine gun from a larger craft that suddenly loomed out of the mist greeted Pratt and Frothingham.

The pair of coastguardsmen estimated that nearly half a hundred shots were pelleted at them. Pratt dropped face downward in the surf, with several machine gun bullets in his body.

Frothingham grabbed the tiller and raced the surfboat four miles to Little Neck, Ipswich.

He was taken from the field and later taken to his home in Yellowhead by some friends.

DISCOVERED IN BRANCHES OF FALLEN TREE ALMOST THREE MILES BELOW SCIOTO BRIDGE

Alonzo Boltenshouse, E. Mound-St. Employee of Sturm-Dillard, Makes Discovery While Hunting Turtles Early Tuesday; Body Had Been In River Since Oct. 31, 1929. When Daughter of Banker Leaped Into River; Body Badly Decomposed.

A body positively identified as jumping into the river at 10 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 31, 1929. The body was identified by two gold teeth in the upper jaw, by a missing plate in the upper jaw of Miss Benford's mouth and by the right shoe which Miss Benford wore when she leaped into the water to her death.

She was identified by Fred Clark, of the Albaugh Co. after the woman's father, B. F. Benford, explained these characteristics. The body is being held at the Albaugh funeral home with funeral arrangements not yet completed.

FOUND BY FISHER
Miss Benford's body was found at 7:30 a. m. by Alonzo Boltenshouse of E. Mound-st., who with his brother, Fenton, had gone turtle-hunting in the river after he completed his all night work at the Sturm-Dillard plant. Boltenshouse noticed something in a tree that had fallen into the river on the west bank about 200 yards south of the Pennsylvania railroad bridge. He walked out on the tree and upon shaking the branches became convinced that the branches were holding a body.

He hurried to Circleville and notified Mayor B. T. Hodges, who notified Safety Director J. Wallace, Chief Coroner C. E. Bowers and Officer William McCrady, who arrived at the scene.

Nothing could be done until a boat was obtained, and McCrady with Roy Walliser, went to the home of Ed. Redman, R. F. D. 7, where a boat was obtained.

McCrady, with Walliser, rowed the boat into the river and to the tree which held the body. McCrady tugged as hard as he could to loosen the body but was unable to do so because of the branches which held it.

NOTE REED SWIMS
More Reed, aged 56, a resident at the home of his son-in-law, Tom Boyer, near the scene of the discovery, undressed then waded and swam to the tree which held the body. He tugged until the body was loosened then with the aid of McCrady and Walliser dragged it to the shore where it was hauled in Redman's wagon to the road and then placed into the Albaugh ambulance.

The body was terribly decomposed. The left foot was missing as was the shoe from that foot. Rivermen, however, said they were surprised at the condition the body was in after being so long in the water.

Miss Benford's act of taking her life in the river was thought to have been prompted by despondency over ill health, she having been under the care of numerous physicians for many years. She had been a patient for a long time in the Mayo Brothers clinic in Rochester, Minn.

Certainty that she had jumped from the bridge was made when her hat, coat and umbrella were found on the Mound-st bridge over the river. Word was first spread of her suicide when Officer William McCrady was notified by a farmer that he had seen a woman's coat hanging on the bridge. The policeman investigated and learned that besides a coat, a hat and umbrella were there. In the coat pockets were found two handkerchiefs, marked with the letter C, and a pair of glasses. By the trademark in the hat it was learned that the hat had been purchased from the Nancy Brown shoppe, and when taken there it was learned the hat had been purchased about a year previous to her death.

WAS IDENTIFIED
Officer McCrady then went to the Benford residence where he inquired for Miss Benford. When told she had gone walking, the officer was certain that the person was Miss Benford.

She was seen walking toward the river about 10 a. m. The river was high and muddy at the time of her death which made searching for her body difficult.

Rivermen have been on the look-out for Miss Benford since she took her life but Boltenshouse was the one to find her. He will claim a reward of $100 offered by her father at the time of the suicide.

REDS CAPTURE, TORTURE TWO MISSIONARIES

Communists Send Finger of One British Woman To Officials, Asking $50,000.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Communist machine gunners in pillaged Changsha today spattered foreign gunboats in Siang River with bullets, wounding one American sailor in the chest and injuring three British sailors, dispatches to the evening papers here reported.

The targets of the Red gunners were the United States gunboat Palos, the British gunboat Teal and the nearby Italian and Japanese gunboats.

The Palos fired several rounds at the hidden Communists. Additional reports stated Communist bandits in the upper Min river district were holding two British women missionaries, the Misses Edith Nettleton and E. J. Harrison for $50,000 ransom.

Dispatches published by the London newspaper declared the bandits took a horrible means of torturing the British authorities of their intention of obtaining the desired ransom. The British legion received a grisly threat in the form of one of the captives' fingers, accompanied by a threat to remove the remainder unless he sum was speedily forthcoming.

Authoritative advices reaching here confirmed the kidnapping report if the ransom is not received, he Communists threaten they will kill either of the captured women.

British authorities at Peking delivered urgent representations to the Chinese to bring about the women's release.

Additional advice confirmed reports that the Chinese rebels are active on all sides and that Changsha was fired upon by a British gunboat.

Charging gross neglect of duty and extreme cruelty, Nevada J. Bowen filed petition for divorce in common pleas court Tuesday against Harley Bowen, this city.

MINERS HURT IN EXPLOSION

Scores Escape Uninjured As Mine in Pennsylvania Is Wrecked By Blast.

VANDERGRIFT, Pa., Three mine workers were injured, one probably fatally, and scores escaped uninjured today when the West Penn mine at Apollo, near here, was partially wrecked by a terrific gas explosion.

Joseph Shlosky, 32, was the most seriously injured, suffering severe burns about the face and body. He was rushed to Citizens General hospital at New Kensington where attaches said his recovery was doubtful.

Bert Ashbaugh, 23, and George Morrow, 27, also were painfully but not seriously injured. They suffered lacerations of the face and body. Hospital attaches believed Ashbaugh and Morrow also had suffered from inhalation of gas fumes.

More than fifty men were in the mine, owned by the Conesmaugh and Kiski Coal Company, when the blast let go but all, with the exception of the three injured men, made their way to the surface unhurt.

Officials of the mine expressed the belief that the explosion was caused by open carbide lamps, used by the men, contacting with and igniting a gas pocket in the colliery.

GUARDS SHOOT FED. EMPLOYEE

Coastguards Mistake Power-boat For Run Runner, Fire
50 Rounds of Bullets.

IPSWICH, Mass., Aug. 5.—A coastguard picket boat from Base No. 7 at Gloucester, mistaking the surf powerboat of the Plum Island station on an errand of mercy for a rum running craft, riddled the small craft with nearly fifty rounds of machine gun fire, killing Boatswain's Mate Louis A. Pratt, 30, of Kittery, Me.

This admission was made today by coastguard headquarters in Boston after the belief had been expressed by authorities here that Pratt had been the victim of gunfire from a liquor smuggling craft in the semi-fog.

The fact that rum running speedboats had never been known to carry machine guns led to inquiry along the shore stations with the result that the fatal mistake of the coastguard picket boat was revealed.

According to the new official version of the sea tragedy, a Plum Island camper notified Coastguard station No. 21 at Plum Island that two Winthrop men were adrift off the mouth of the Ipswich river.

Pratt and Cleo Frothingham, of Jonesport, Me., coastguard surfman, put out into the midnight semi-fog to the rescue, off Knobs Island, near the mouth of the Ipswich river, a sudden hail of bullets, accompanied by the rat-tat-tat of the machine gun from a larger craft that suddenly loomed out of the mist greeted Pratt and Frothingham.

The pair of coastguardsmen estimated that nearly half a hundred shots were peltered at them.

Pratt dropped face downward in the surfboat, with several machine gun bullets in his body.

Frothingham grabbed the tiller and raced the surfboat four miles to Little Neck, Ipswich.

DISCOVERED IN BRANCHES OF FALLEN TREE ALMOST THREE MILES BELOW SCIOTO BRIDGE

Alonzo Boltenshouse, E. Mound-St, Employee of Sturm-Dillard, Makes Discovery While Hunting Turtles Early Tuesday; Body Had Been In River Since Oct. 31,
1929. When Daughter of Banker Leaped
Into River; Body Badly
Decomposed.

A body positively identified as jumping into the river at 10 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 31, 1929. The body was identified by two gold teeth in the upper jaw, by a missing plate in the upper jaw of Miss Benford's mouth and by the right shoe which Miss Benford wore when she leaped into the water to her death.

She was identified by Fred Clark, of the Albaugh Co. after the woman's father, B. F. Benford, explained these characteristics.

The body is being held at the Albaugh funeral home with funeral arrangements not yet completed.

FOUND BY FISHER

Miss Benford's body was found at 7:30 a. m. by Alonzo Boltenshouse of E. Mound-st, who with his brother, Fenton, had gone turtle-hunting in the river after he completed his all night work at the Sturm-Dillard plant. Boltenshouse noticed something in the thought was a foot protruding through some branches on a part of a tree that had fallen into the river on the west bank about 200 yards south of the Pennsylvania railroad bridge. He walked out on the tree and upon shaking the branches became convinced that the branches were holding a body. He hurried to Circleville and notified Mayor B. T. Hedges, who with Safety Director J. W. W. Crist, Coroner C. E. Bowers and Officer William McCrady hurried to the scene.

Nothing could be done until a boat was obtained, and McCrady with Roy Walliser, went to the home of Ed. Redman, R. F. D. 7, where a boat was obtained. McCrady, with Walliser, rowed the boat into the river and to the tree which held the body. McCrady tugged as hard as he could to loosen the body but was unable to do so because of the branches which held it.

NOTE REED SWIMS
Mote Reed, aged 53, a resident at the home of his son-in-law, Tom Boyer, near the scene of the discovery, undressed then waded and swam to the tree which held the body. He tugged until the body was loosened then with the aid of McCrady and Walliser dragged it to the shore where it was hauled in Redman's wagon to the road and then placed into the Albaugh ambulance.

The body was terribly decomposed. The left foot was missing as was the shoe from that foot. Rivermen, however, said they were surprised at the condition the body was in after being so long in the water.

Miss Benford's act of taking her life in the river was thought to have been prompted by despondency over ill health, she having been under the care of numerous physicians for many years. She had been a patient for a long time in the Mayo Brothers clinic in Rochester, Minn.

Certainty that she had jumped from the bridge was made when her hat, coat and umbrella were found on the Mound-st bridge over the river. Word was first spread of her suicide when Officer William McCrady was notified by a farmer that he had seen a woman's coat hanging on the bridge. The policeman investigated and learned that besides a coat, a hat and umbrella were there. In the coat pockets were found two handkerchiefs, marked with the letter C, and a pair of glasses. By the trade-mark in the hat it was learned that the hat had been purchased from the Nancy Brown shops, and when taken there it was learned the hat had been purchased about a year previous to her death.

WAS IDENTIFIED
Officer McCrady then went to the Benford residence where he inquired for Miss Benford. When told she had gone walking, the officer was certain that the person was Miss Benford.

She was seen walking toward the river about 10 a. m. The river was high and muddy at the time of her death which made searching for her body difficult.

Rivermen have been on the lookout for Miss Benford since she took her life but Boltenshouse was the one to find her. He will claim a reward of $100 offered by her father at the time of the suicide.

PETTIT-SINCLAIR'S WIN OVER COCA COLAS IN 10TH INNING

Two Long Hits, One Called Foul on Weller, and One Which Ended With Heeter Out at the Plate Take Away Chances For Last Year's Champs; Watson and Maloney Engage in Splendid Pitching Duel.

The Pettit-Sinclair aggregation base with no credit for any strikes pulled more or less of a surprise out of the box Monday evening at Mason's park when they defeated the Coca Colas 1 to 0 in the first part of the tenth inning, and now slid into a tie for second place with the Bottlers and Doggy Ward's.

The game at the north end was exciting and interesting, as fans would necessarily think it would be, as in the first nine stanzas, neither team was able to do anything but pop up, except in the sixth frame when the pop shop men loaded the bases, and had a perfect chance to score.

Finally after nine innings of ball had been played, during the first part of the tenth, Don White reached base through a muffed ball in the infield, and was followed by Stook Valentine who sent a whizzing grounder to pitcher Bob Maloney who threw it to Cuz Dumm on second. The ball bounced out of Dumm's hands, and rolled away out in the outfield, and as a result White ran all the way from first base to home.

In the fifth inning, with Gene Smith on, Dutch Weller sent a sure home run away out in left field, which looked mighty good but Sherd Boyer decided that it was a foul ball and as a result when Weller came to bat again, and popped up.

In the seventh Jack Heeter had a sure home run hit in the left field and ran all the way to home, but Sherd Boyer declared him out. If Heeter had remained on third the next man to plate could have knocked a sacrifice into the outfield and he could have later scored but the coach on third base sent him home and he was called out, and nothing could be done about it.

Eddie Watson, moundsman for the winners, hurled his regular steady ball and had five strikeouts and allowed no men free on base.

Bob Maloney, also hurled nice ball, allowing but one man free on

COUNTY HEALTH CASES LISTED

Local Health Departments announce that Pickaway-co cases have been registered for the local diagnostic chest clinic. This does not indicate that all the tuberculosis that might be found in this community but it is representative of the class of patients desired for this clinic. The health authorities could not hope to have all patients attend this clinic but feel that the interest aroused in the general subject will encourage the general public to seek their physician's examination and advice.

The family physician is ready and willing to offer his best services to those who need it, but is frequently prevented from carrying out his best intentions on account of the negligence and indifference of people applying for his services. The physician cannot go into the home and ask to examine all the family as he would then be accused of seeking business. At the present time, too frequently patients with tuberculosis wait until the world knows the disease before consulting their physician.

It is true that many of the communicable diseases have been practically banished. Yellow fever is a thing of the past; cholera and plague visit us only when introduced by our over-seas neighbors; diphtheria is no longer dreaded as formerly as with our knowledge of antitoxin and immunization we are able to assure its complete control; typhoid fever occurs only when the fundamental laws of hygiene and sanitation have been violated. Thus the whole list of communicable diseases might be gone over showing that rapid strides are being made toward their eradication, but there remains the fact that one tuberculosis, while it is on the decline, is yet the major cause of death among this group of diseases.

From time to time this problem has been attacked from many angles and it would seem that all available methods have been employed. Those commonly used in other communicable diseases have been tried, with no marked results. Immunization against tuberculosis is as yet unknown. Quarantine does not seem applicable since this is a chronic disease and its communicability depends on whether or not it is active. The quiescent case, which should be released from quarantine may become active and a menace to society in a few days; however, State Regulations provide a limited quarantine, whereby tuberculosis persons may not come into intimate direct contact with food supplies nor attend school.

Another method which has been employed and has given a certain degree of satisfaction is that of education of the public as to the dangers of the disease, its transmissibility and certain factors which favor its arrest.

GORDON TIRES GAIN LEAGUE LEADERSHIP EDGING WARDS

Score Three Runs in Opening Session to Cinch Encounter; Great Support on Part of Wilson in Left Field and Ed. Imler at Third Base Cut Down Gordon Runs; Robinson Enjoys Perfect Day at Bat.

Gordon Tires went into undisputed possession of first place in the recreation league standing Monday evening by defeating a make-shift Doggy Ward aggregation. The score was 4-3 and the game played at Utilities field, was played before a large and enthusiastic crowd.

The game started like a Gordon walkaway when three runs were tallied in the opening session, on a walk, an error, a clean hit down the third base line by Dick Robinson, and another error. The Gordons were blanked in the second frame then came back with one run in the third session. That ended the Gordon scoring for from the fourth frame on support that has been seen on only a few occasions this season was given to the Ward moundsman.

The Wards scored in the second frame on a hit by Hutchinson, a force-out, a strike-out and a hit to right field by Pinky Wilson.

The losers came back with another marker in the sixth frame to cut the lead 4-2. The deputy's outfit had a golden opportunity in the eighth when with men on second and third and two out, Frank Davis was at bat. Davis drove a hard-smash in the direction of third base, which Bob Pickens knocked down then winged to first in time to get the runner. Had Pickens' throw been a little slower, two runs would have scored for the Wardmen.

Then in the ninth session, the Wardmen came mighty near tying the old ball game. Hutchinson singled, the next batter was out and so was the next. With two out and Hutchinson on base, Wilson again came through with a hit. Parks fielded the ball and pegged to the plate in an effort to cut off Hutchinson. The ball sailed over Robinson's head and Hutchinson went home. Wilson was speeding around the sacks and tore for the plate with what would have been the tying run. He was called out as he slid in and the game was ended.

Puddin' Oliver tossed a good game for the winners granting seven hits and fanning four men. He had no bases on balls. Geib pitched for the Wards, with Jaggy Davis absent and Red Owens nursing a sore arm. He granted eight hits, fanned four, and walked three.

Those commonly used in other communicable diseases have been tried, with no marked results. Immunization against tuberculosis is as yet unknown. Quarantine does not seem applicable since this is a chronic disease and its communicability depends on whether or not it is active. The quiescent case, which should be released from quarantine may become active and a menace to society in a few days; however, State Regulations provide a limited quarantine, whereby tuberculosis persons may not come into intimate direct contact with food supplies nor attend school.

Another method which has been employed and has given a certain degree of satisfaction is that of education of the public as to the dangers of the disease, its transmissibility and certain factors which favor its arrest.

GORDON TIRES GAIN LEAGUE LEADERSHIP EDGING WARDS

Score Three Runs in Opening Session to Cinch Encounter; Great Support on Part of Wilson in Left Field and Ed. Imler at Third Base Cut Down Gordon Runs; Robinson Enjoys Perfect Day at Bat.

Gordon Tires went into undisputed possession of first place in the recreation league standing Monday evening by defeating a make-shift Doggy Ward aggregation. The score was 4-3 and the game, played at Utilities field, was played before a large and enthusiastic crowd.

The game started like a Gordon walkaway when three runs were tallied in the opening session, on a walk, an error, a clean hit down the third base line by Dick Robinson, and another error. The Gordons were blanked in the second frame then came back with one run in the third session. That ended the Gordon scoring for from the fourth frame on support that has been seen on only a few occasions this season was given to the Ward moundsman.

The Wards scored in the second frame on a hit by Hutchinson, a force-out, a strike-out and a hit to right field by Pinky Wilson.

The losers came back with another marker in the sixth frame to cut the lead 4-2. The deputy's outfit had a golden opportunity in the eighth when with men on second and third and two out, Frank Davis was at bat. Davis drove a hard smash in the direction of third base, which Bob Pickens knocked down then winged to first in time to get the runner. Had Pickens' throw been a little slower, two runs would have scored for the Wardmen.

Then in the ninth session, the Wardmen came mighty near tying the old ball game. Hutchinson singled, the next batter was out and so was the next. With two out and Hutchinson on base, Wilson again came through with a hit. Parks fielded the ball and pegged to the plate in an effort to cut off Hutchinson. The ball sailed over Robinson's head and Hutchinson went home. Wilson was speeding around the sacks and tore for the plate with what would have been the tying run. He was called out as he slid in and the game was ended.

Puddin' Oliver tossed a good game for the winners granting seven hits and fanning four men. He had no bases on balls. Geib pitched for the Wards, with Jaggy Davis absent and Red Owens nursing a sore arm. He granted eight hits, fanned four, and walked three.

Chapter XII

Leaving Battleship Decks For No
Fault of His Own the Future
Admiral Takes to Aviation

IN the month of March, 1916, even a phlegmatic man might have rebelled against being classified as a lame duck. It was a month in which the most placid man would have felt uneasy upon a shelf. More than half the world was locked in such a struggle as civilization had never seen before, nor hardly imagined for that matter. And even an average man, though he might be by reason of his nationality exempt from the necessity of taking part, wanted to feel that if the necessity arose he was able to share in it.

How much more strongly, then, would a man feel who all his life long had resisted the everydayness of existence, had tried in whatever way he could to make each moment more eventful, more fraught with conflict, than it seemed to wish to be.

In Europe, Great Britain and France and Belgium and their allies against Germany, Austria and their allies, were fighting battles which seemed to have no end. Their fighting was one long battle. They fought to the last ditch, then dropped into that and fought on. Especially at Verdun was this true just now. That tremendous effort of the German Crown Prince to break through to the French coast had moved into its second phase. February, and the crushing, sacrificial thrust which had gained the Germans possession of Fromezey, Abaucourt and Moranville in front of the French line of fortresses was past. General Fétin, after an incredible resistance through the first fortnight of the new month, had decisively driven his enemies back off the rim of the Douaumont plateau and was holding firm. Hardly less arresting was the war in the East where Russia, still an absolute monarchy, was driving hard in the lake region south of Dvinsk in an effort to take some of the pressure off her ally to the westward. Men were sacrificing their lives in unheard-of numbers. Two million were to die in the course of the year 1917. And in America, it was coming to be more and more of a conviction that the United States would move, sooner or later, to the side of the sorely pressed French, Belgians and British. It was the conviction particularly in the regular army of the United States and among the naval officers from whom Richard Byrd took a sober leave on March 16.

Even now-a-days there are some who insist that Byrd was always so fortunate that if he ever fell into the river he would be sure to come up with a fish in every pocket. He has been, these critics will tell you, a man who got all the breaks and never had to go against a head wind. The truth, of course, is that the determination of Byrd has made his own career. When matters were not going well he set out stubbornly to change them into something better. This was what he did after he was retired from the Navy. And even though the extraordinary result was that he finally got back upon that road of exploration which he had sought as a boy, chance, as such, can claim little credit.

If Byrd had been born lucky he would have been born with a different body, stronger, stouter physique, more fit to stand the rigors of the career he was about to enter. The fact is that even at twenty-eight, and after years of athletic endeavor, he was still light, still slender, almost fragile if one judged only by what the eye took in. Not so very long after Bob Davis, that shrewd observer of men who was for so long the beloved editor of Munsey's Magazine, said:

"Physically, he suggests a delicate instrument fabricated to the point of frailty. If one chooses to regard him as a product of evolution, it is easy to conceive that in the remote past he might have been a frigate bird winging his way across the seven seas. Even in repose he seems prepared for flight. In action he is Annapolis personified, erect, alert, eager. His eyes are binocular, apparently penetrating to horizons beyond human vision. From his high, Anglo-Saxon, slightly sloping forehead, the hair ripples in wave-lengths that might well have been the offspring of a steady west wind blowing fair upon him from infancy; a buoyant creature born in the breeze. He was fashioned for this generation of flyers and his plunions are poised for the air. But there are two Byrds in that body. A realist and a dreamer, a conqueror of the clouds of the earth, a commuter in the realms of the imagination."

If an observer had possessed the powers of prophecy, that description might have been applied, word for word, to the sober, depressed young lieutenant who limped home after his conference with his commanding officer on March 16, of the year 1916. But, in the days immediately following, an especially shrewd observer would have perceived that for the time being the realistic Byrd, the dogged conqueror, was in the saddle. The Navy had told him he was on the shelf. He meant to show the Navy a thing or two.

For a little, doubtless because it comforted him to work in a familiar field, he bent his restless energies toward developing the Naval Militia of Rhode Island. He was its commander, and within a few months he had so improved the organization that he won an official commendation. By 1917, however, he saw that such reservist work would not do. It was the year in which the United States went into the World War. Even before the actual declaration, Byrd had made his choice. It was the inevitable choice. He laid his plans to perfect himself in that new, almost miraculous science and art and profession combined under the name of aviation. In no other sphere of activity could he have been so free of the handicap of that frail foot; and that was enough to make his choice certain.

There was, however, almost certainly another reason. To such an imaginative, far-reaching mind as Byrd's one feels sure it was plain, even back in 1917, that aviation would be the surest road of the future to great adventure. He must have seen, even though dimly, the colossal triumphs of the years to come.

He entered the Naval flying school at Pensacola, Florida, and on the day after President Wilson decided that America would not take orders from any foreign power, Byrd had got so far along that he was commissioned in the rank of lieutenant, senior grade, and in his old branch of the service. The Navy had thrown him out as useless, but here he was, back in, and one step farther up the ladder. He was also made assistant superintendent of the school.

The extraordinary energy which had enabled Byrd to fit himself so quickly for his new sphere is attested by the man who taught him. In 1917, Lawrence Shea, now a staid Boston business man, was a reckless pioneer in aviation, so much in the vanguard that he knew enough to be serving as an instructor pilot at the Pensacola school when Byrd arrived.

"Every moment of his time he gave up to study," Shea said some years after. "He seemed to feel that if he could only be in the air he could learn. And in order to get there he accepted invitations from any one who had a plane to use. It wasn't only with competent instructors that he flew. He would go with any one who said he could fly. He risked his life more times than any other beginner I ever saw." Twice he had crashes. Once he met another plane head-on. But he kept on going.

Doubtless there were some at the Pensacola school who thought Byrd mad to take such chances. Looking back, however, it becomes fairly evident that he was not mad at all. Rather he was amazingly sane. In the very beginning of his career as a flyer, he was realizing that here he had an opportunity the Navy had denied him, and he was making the most of it. The Navy could not use a man with an undependable foot. But in an airplane a foot, good or bad, made no especial difference. That Byrd grasped this fact is indicated by the course which followed, a course which made him one of the most air-minded of men in a day when only the exceptional enthusiast was at all air-minded. When Charles A. Lindberg was a youngster tinkering around in Minnesota with an automobile that he had made of spare parts picked up only he knew where, Byrd was an expert aviator to whom others turned for instruction.

Shortly, on top of his duty as assistant superintendent of the school at Pensacola, he was made a member of the Crash Board. This was made up of senior officers whose mission it was to study the cause of flying accidents, not so much as to place blame as to recommend improvements which would prevent similar ones in the future. Even this extra work was not enough to fill all Byrd's time. Somewhere he found spare moments to study night flying, and night bombing, two subjects which had become of major importance in Europe just then and which, it seemed more and more likely, would become of equal importance in the United States. He taught these, being the first man in the country to qualify as a professor in such matters.

That Byrd was kept at such tasks, instead of being permitted to take his plane to France, will always be one of his major regrets. The foot, of course, was to blame in some small measure. But the chief reason was for his attention in the United States was his extraordinary value. He knew too much to be allowed to get away. So the powers saved his protest with a promotion, making him a lieutenant commander, and asked him to substitute for battles flight in France the duties of chief of the American air forces in Canada. By the middle of 1918 he had won the official commendation of the director of the Royal Canadian Air Force and just after the end of the war in November of the same year he received a similar distinction from Admiral W. L. Grant of the British Royal Navy.

The admiral's commendation put an official period to Byrd's war days. That it did not also put an official period to his new career in the Navy proves how valuable he had grown. Discarded two years before, he now knew so much that the Navy was glad to keep him, undependable foot and all. And Byrd, once more completely confident of his future, took advantage of the Navy's attitude to urge an experiment which had been in his mind a long time.

Use of Fire In Or Near Woods Now Unlawful

Under present conditions of drouth, it is unlawful for any person to kindle a fire in or near the woods. Section 1177-100 of the General Code or Ohio declares that no fires shall be kindled in or near any woodland "nor in any place whence it is likely to escape there-to, unless all leaves, grass, wood, and inflammable material surrounding the place where said fire is kindled, have first been removed, to a safe distance, and all other due and reasonable precautions are taken to prevent its escape from control, nor shall any such fire be left until extinguished or safely covered." Under the present conditions of drouth, it is practically impossible to start a fire near the woods or grass fields without serious danger of the fire escaping from control. The surrounding inflammable material cannot be removed "to a safe distance." Such fires are therefore kindled in violation of the law, and those responsible are liable to prosecution whether the fire escapes or not. The penalty provided is heavy. The fire laws of this State also make it an offense to start a fire by carelessly dropping a cigarette or other burning or glowing substance.

Parents should be particularly careful to prevent their children from playing with matches. Many destructive fires this year have been traced to this cause. The practice of burning trash and papers at the edge of the woods or of weed fields is extremely dangerous. Fires built at a distance from the woods and in apparently safe places should be drenched with water and then covered with shovelfuls of earth.

That Byrd grasped this fact is indicated by the course which followed, a course which made him one of the most air-minded of men in a day when only the exceptional enthusiast was at all air-minded. When Charles A. Lindberg was a youngster tinkering around in Minnesota with an automobile that he had made of spare parts picked up only he knew where, Byrd was an expert aviator to whom others turned for instruction.

Shortly, on top of his duty as assistant superintendent of the school at Pensacola, he was made a member of the Crash Board. This was made up of senior officers whose mission it was to study the cause of flying accidents, not so much as to place blame as to recommend improvements which would prevent similar ones in the future. Even this extra work was not enough to fill all Byrd's time. Somewhere he found spare moments to study night flying, and night bombing, two subjects which had become of major importance in Europe just then and which, it seemed more and more likely, would become of equal importance in the United States. He taught these, being the first man in the country to qualify as a professor in such matters.

That Byrd was kept at such tasks, instead of being permitted to take his plane to France, will always be one of his major regrets. The foot, of course, was to blame in some small measure. But the chief reason was for his contention in the United States was his extraordinary value. He knew too much to be allowed to get away. So the powers saved his protest with a promotion, making him a lieutenant commander, and asked him to substitute for battleship flight in France the duties of chief of the American air forces in Canada. By the middle of 1918 he had won the official commendation of the director of the Royal Canadian Air Force and just after the end of the war in November of the same year he received a similar distinction from Admiral W. L. Grant of the British Royal Navy.

The admiral's commendation put an official period to Byrd's war days. That it did not also put an official period to his new career in the Navy proves how valuable he had grown. Discarded two years before, he now knew so much that the Navy was glad to keep him, undependable foot and all. And Byrd, once more completely confident of his future, took advantage of the Navy's attitude to urge an experiment which had been in his mind a long time.

Use of Fire In Or Near Woods Now Unlawful

Under present conditions of drouth, it is unlawful for any person to kindle a fire in or near the woods. Section 1177-100 of the General Code or Ohio declares that no fires shall be kindled in or near any woodland "nor in any place whence it is likely to escape there, unless all leaves, grass, wood, and inflammable material surrounding the place where said fire is kindled, have first been removed, to a safe distance, and all other due and reasonable precautions are taken to prevent its escape from control, nor shall any such fire be left until extinguished or safely covered." Under the present conditions of drouth, it is practically impossible to start a fire near the woods or grass fields without serious danger of the fire escaping from control. The surrounding inflammable material cannot be removed "to a safe distance." Such fires are therefore kindled in violation of the law, and those responsible are liable to prosecution whether the fire escapes or not. The penalty provided is heavy.

The fire laws of this State also make it an offense to start a fire by carelessly dropping a cigarette or other burning or glowing substance.

Parents should be particularly careful to prevent their children from playing with matches. Many destructive fires this year have been traced to this cause. The practice of burning trash and papers at the edge of the woods or of weed fields is extremely dangerous. Fires built at a distance from the woods and in apparently safe places should be drenched with water and then covered with shovelfulls of earth.

Three Years Wages Spent In One Week

It often happened in the old New England Seaports when men came back from whaling voyages and squandered the earnings of three years of bitter toil.

"THE SEA BRIDE"

By Ben Ames Williams

Will tell you, in the pages of this newspaper of the perils and romance of one of the most romantic callings in the world. The reason so many whalemens flung their wages away was because their home port was often the only civilized town at which their ship had touched in a voyage lasting years. It was an amazing period in sea history—and the men and women were amazing who lived by its hard wrung profits. Read every word of "The Sea Bride" beginning Thursday in

A MILK ORDER

An English firm which buys malted milk in large quantities from a big American company has sent in a new order for 1,000,000 pounds. That looks good. But it happens that the American manufacturer has a plant in Ontario, and the British customer insists that the order be turned over to the Canadian plant.

"This is done," it is said by the Toronto Globe, on account of our new tariff. British interests are transferring their patronage to Canada.

Doubtless Canada needs the order. "It's a bit of recent industrial advances, it is still primarily an agricultural country. We can probably get along without it, for our farm business is so shot that losing another big order or two seems to make little difference in the general situation. And a million-pound order sounds a good deal bigger in Canada, where political use is being made of it, than it does in our more populous and prosperous country."

Still and all—there could have been with that order, say, a tariff like ours, or higher. Then foreign customers buying from her, even British customers, may turn to us again.

Britain herself is being urged to build tariff walls. Various other nations are considering it. All you have to do is to make a law. Then maybe in a few years we'll be holding tariff limitation conferences along with our armament conferences.

A tariff is all right. A navy is all right. Each is a weapon of defense. Only, neither works very well when other fellow raises your ante.

FRECKLES, THE CHAMP

There's more to marbles than some of us have supposed. Here's Vinnie Sullivan, freckled-faced champion, winning championships at home and then going to South America for new worlds to conquer.

He traveled as guest of the Panama Mail Line. He was treated royally by crew and passengers. He landed in Colombia and with half the people on the ship in his entourage, marched into Cartagena and conquered that historic capital.

He was greeted with brass bands and dinners. He played a match on a fashionable club house lawn for the championship of Colombia, and won it hands down. The juvenile population followed him around in open-eyed admiration and envy. A prominent citizen immediately organized a marbles club with 500 members. Latin America, which has already learned to play baseball, will now learn to play marbles.

Talk about good-will ambassadors! Vinnie may get a ticker-tape shower when he comes back.

PAINT

There comes a time in the summer vacation when the children have exhausted most of the amusements which at first so charmed them. All the games are stale. Then the time the wise parent will invest in some brushes and a few small cans of paint. If the artists are not very big, water colors on picture books sold for the purpose may be best. But if they are big enough to be at all responsible—say ten to fifteen—let them do a real job.

How about the porch furniture? Getting a little shabby by now? Let a grown-up into the game for a few hours at first, showing them how to handle paints and brushes, how to keep the latter clean and the paint clear.

If the porch furniture is too good, how about buying a little lumber and a few tools of their own, and letting them build some back yard furniture? Good and substantial results may be obtained by the judicious use of one-by-threes. A little tennep-and-groove flooring, if they wish for really fancy table tops may be added. A little one-by-two and maybe a bit of quarter-round and there they are.

Found themselves? Certainly. Hurt themselves? Maybe a little. But they will learn the use of the saw and plane surprisingly soon. And the constructive joy is beyond all bounds. Don't let him fight more than is necessary. Let sister have a corner for her green and orange, brother a spot for his experiments in blue and gold. If they seek other fields to conquer, how about the cellar? And when they have learned down there, maybe they can do kitchen cupboard doors and things.

A WORKABLE COMBINATION

"WHERE'S EMILY?"
by CAROLYN WELLS

CHAPTER XLVII.
AND so, when Fleming Stone came into the room, he saw a pretty girl with a sweet but troubled face sitting up against the pillows waiting for him.

"Let me do the talking," he suggested. "We want to cover all the ground we can with the least possible exertion on your part. I'll tell you what I know and what I think, and you can set me right if I go astray."

And so expeditions was the detective's procedure, and so true his deductions and conclusions, that Emily had little to do but acquiesce and tell him a few points that he had no other way of learning.

"Now," he said, as they finished their coffee, "if you would be willing to put this all out of your mind for twenty-four hours. Forget it utterly and leave it all to me. In the meantime, you get thoroughly rested, give poor Mr. Sayre a sight of you, and your aunt, too, if you feel equal to it, and then, tomorrow, if you're up to it, tell the whole story to us all."

"That would just suit me," Emily smiled at him. "This talk with you is about all I can stand for one day, but tomorrow I'll be ready to face the whole world."

"I believe you will be," and Stone realized that, severe though the shock had been this young, healthy constitution was going to throw off the effects with astonishing rapidity.

At the nurse's orders, Emily had a long rest, and after luncheon Rodney was allowed to visit her. Warned not to be too emotional, he just took her into a strong, silent embrace, and then, laying her back on the pillows, he said:

"Not much talky-talky, my lady. You're just to be still and look at me and let me look at you for the space of twenty minutes, and then it's good-by until tomorrow."

"We'll have our twenty minutes," Emily assured him, "and something tells me we won't wait till tomorrow for another twenty. If I wheedle the nurse, I'm sure she'll let you come in and say good night to me, and oh, Roddy, darling, in a day or two, I'll be absolutely all right again. Won't that be fine?"

Sayre fully agreed with this, and then the twenty minutes flew by as if on wings.

And Judy was allowed a short interview and Betty and Gibby a peep, and then Emily was ordered to rest up for the interview of the morning.

It was an important affair. Emily, dressed in her right mind and fairly strong and well, sat on the sofa in the lounge, with Rodney beside her.

"You've killed Polly," I cried. "You threw her over into the ravine!"

"Nonsense," he said, "you're dreaming; I did nothing of the sort. Come along with me up to the house and I'll show you Polly there, alive and well."

"I felt dazed, I didn't know what to do, and urged on, in fact he half carried me, I found myself in the Pennington house."

"Where's Polly?" I demanded, for I saw only Rosa, the maid.

"Without a word, Jim picked me up and carried me upstairs. He opened the door of the nursery and put me inside, and came in himself."

"Now, Emily," he said, speaking with perfect calm, "you saw me. I did push Polly over. Never mind why or how. Are you going to tell?"

"Tell?" I cried. "Of course I'm going to tell! I can't wait to get to some place where I can tell."

"I went on and came to the bridge where Jim Pennington stood alone."

"You threw her over into the ravine!"

Don't Gamble with Your Sight!

Iritis, a Painful Eye Ailment, Must Be Treated Promptly to Avoid Permanent Trouble

By R. S. COPELAND, M.D.
U. S. Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

WE all know the colored part of the eye is the iris. It is brown, or blue, or black, or gray.

The iris is really a muscle. What appears to be a black patch in the middle is a hole in the iris. This is the "pupil," which varies in size as the muscles and circulation of blood cause it to dilate and contract.

Of course, the iris is subject to disease as is any other muscle. Its most disagreeable ailment, is called "iritis."

In iritis, or inflammation of this muscle, the most marked symptom is pain. This may be located either in the eyeball, or in the forehead between the brows. There is much watering of the eye and bright lights cause distress.

There is a zone of redness in the "white of the eye," around the iris, together with dimness of vision. The redness gradually spreads until the entire white may become inflamed. The pupil, which normally reacts to light and shade, becomes fixed in iritis.

This condition requires careful attention in order that the sight may not be affected permanently. Valuable time is sometimes lost by mistaking the trouble for "conjunctivitis," which is an inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the eyelid and covering the eyeball.

Reading, or any close work, must be avoided, and dark shades may be worn for comfort. But the underlying cause must be cleared up before recovery can be expected.

In the chronic form, there may be present some blood disease, tuberculosis, or diabetes. In this case the constitutional disease is probably the cause of the iritis. Your doctor will institute the necessary general treatment.

But if the cause is obscure, a search must be made to find where the trouble lies. Chronic constipation, pyorrhea, decayed teeth, abscessed tonsils are all factors in producing this disease.

In the control of this disease I want to emphasize the importance of plenty of rest and relief from nervous excitement. The patient should spend much time out-of-doors and exercise reasonably. But he must be careful to avoid the bright sun light. The diet should be carefully watched.

In treating iritis the pupil is kept dilated by the medicine the doctor prescribes. For the relief of the pain, the application of heat, as hot as can be borne, is the most beneficial. Capsicum-oil ointment applied to the temple may help to relieve the suffering.

If there is redness of the eye or any pain, be sure to consult your doctor immediately. The trouble is probably not serious, but do not take a chance.

"Ladies of Leisure," the Columbia all-talking drama of New York night life with Barbara Stanwyck, Lowell Sherman and Ralph Graves, is at the Metropolitan theatre. Frank Capra, ace director who turned out such films as "Submarine" and "Flight," handled the megaphone. The film is an adaptation of a David Belasco stage play by Milton Herbert Gropper.

The story is not a complex one. It proves the theory that a woman is what a man chooses to make of her. A girl of the streets will become a lady if she is treated as one. "Ladies of Leisure" dramatizes this fact in the case of an idealist artist and a gold-digging party girl.

What makes this picture really one of the prizes of the season is the superlative acting of the entire cast. Seldom is it seen by an opportunity to see assembled in one film a cast of this calibre. It includes in addition to the three stars mentioned above—Marie Prevost, George Fawcett, Nance O'Neil, Juliette Compton and Johnnie Walker. The extremely capable director, Frank Capra has turned out another winner. Don't miss this dramatic triumph.

A MILK ORDER

An English firm which buys malted milk in large quantities from a big American company has sent in a new order for 1,000,000 pounds. That looks good. But it happens that the American manufacturer has a plant in Ontario, and the British customer insists that the order be turned over to the Canadian plant.

This is done, it is said by the Toronto Globe, on account of our new tariff. British interests are transferring their patronage to Canada.

Doubtless Canada needs the order. It spite of recent industrial advances, it is still primarily an agricultural country. We can probably get along without it, for our farm business is so shot that losing another big order or two seems to make little difference in the general situation. And a million-pound order sounds a good deal bigger in Canada, where political use is being made of it, than it does in our more populous and prosperous country.

Still and all—we could have borne with that order, say. But never mind. From present indications Canada will soon have a tariff like ours, or higher. Then foreign customers buying from her, even British customers, may turn to us again.

Britain herself is being urged to build tariff walls. Various other nations are considering it. All you have to do is to make a law.

Then maybe in a few years we'll be holding tariff limitation conferences along with our armament conferences.

A tariff is all right. A navy is all right. Each is a weapon of defense. Only, neither works very well when other fellow raises your ante.

FRECKLES, THE CHAMP

There's more to marbles than some of us have supposed. Here's Vinnie Sullivan, freckled-faced champion, winning championships at home and then going to South America for new worlds to conquer.

He traveled as guest of the Panama Mail Line. He was treated royally by crew and passengers. He landed in Columbia and, with half the people on the ship in his entourage, marched into Cartagena and conquered that historic capital.

He was greeted with brass bands and dinners. He played a match on a fashionable club house lawn for the championship of Columbia, and won it hands down. The juvenile population followed him around in open-eyed admiration and envy. A prominent citizen immediately organized a marbles club with 500 members. Latin-America, which has already learned to play baseball, will now learn to play marbles.

Talk about good-will ambassadors! Vinnie may get a ticker-tape shower when he comes back.

PAINT

There comes a time in the summer vacation when the children have exhausted most of the amusements which at first so charmed them. All the games are stale. Then's the time the wise parent will invest in some brushes and a few small cans of paint. If the artists are not very big, water colors on picture books sold for the purpose may be best. But if they are big enough to be at all responsible—say ten to fifteen—let them do a real job.

How about the porch furniture? Getting a little shabby by now? Let a grown-up into the game for a few hours at first, showing them how to handle paints and brushes, how to keep the latter clean and the paint clear.

If the porch furniture is too good, how about buying a little lumber and a few tools of their own, and letting them build some back yard furniture? Good and substantial results may be obtained by the judicious use of one-by-threes. A little tongue-and-groove flooring, if they wish for really fancy table tops, may be added. A little one-by-two, and mayhap a bit of quarter-round, and there they are.

Found themselves? Certainly. Hurt themselves? Maybe a little. But they will learn the use of the saw and plane surprisingly soon. And the constructive joy is beyond all bounds. Don't let him fight more than is necessary. Let sister have a corner for her green and orange, brother a spot for his experiments in blue and gold. If they seek other fields to conquer, how about the cellar? And when they have learned down there, maybe they can do kitchen cupboard doors and things.

A WORKABLE COMBINATION

"WHERE'S EMILY?"

by CAROLYN WELLS

CHAPTER XLVII.

AND so, when Fleming Stone came into the room, he saw a pretty girl with a sweet but troubled face sitting up against the pillows waiting for him.

"Let me do the talking," he suggested. "We want to cover all the ground we can with the least possible exertion on your part. I'll tell you what I know and what I think, and you can set me right if I go astray."

And so expeditious was the detective's procedure, and so true his deductions and conclusions, that Emily had little to do but acquiesce and tell him a few points that he had no other way of learning.

"Now," he said, as they finished their confab, "I wonder if you would be willing to put this all out of your mind for twenty-four hours. Forget it utterly and leave it all to me. In the meantime, you get thoroughly rested, give poor Mr. Sayre a sight of you, and your aunt, too, if you feel equal to it, and then, tomorrow, if you're up to it, tell the whole story to us all."

"That would just suit me," Emily smiled at him. "This talk with you is about all I can stand for one day, but tomorrow I'll be ready to face the whole world."

At the nurse's orders, Emily had a long rest, and after luncheon Rodney was allowed to visit her. Warned not to be too emotional, he just took her into a strong, silent embrace, and then, laying her back on the pillows, he said:

"Not much talky-talky, my lady. You're just to be still and look at me and let me look at you for the space of twenty minutes, and then it's good-by until tomorrow."

"We'll have our twenty minutes," Emily assured him, "and something tells me we won't wait till tomorrow for another twenty. If I wheedle the nurse, I'm sure she'll let you come in and say good night to me, and oh, Roddy, darling, in a day or two, I'll be absolutely all right again. Won't that be fine?"

Sayre fully agreed with this, and then the twenty minutes flew by as if on wings.

Aunt Judy was allowed a short interview and Betty and Gibby a peep, and then Emily was ordered to rest up for the interview of the morrow.

It was an important affair. Emily, dressed in her right mind and fairly strong and well, sat on the sofa in the lounge, with Rodney beside her.

She was about to tell her story to those most concerned to hear it, and her audience included Chief Jennings and Detective Lawlor, as well as Fleming Stone and the Knollwood household.

"I shall tell this just as it happened," Emily began, in a low, clear voice. "I shall make it as short as I can, and I can fill in details later. For I don't want to give out before I finish."

"As you all know, I left here about five o'clock the day of the tea, to run over to the hospital to kiss Mrs. Lawrence's new baby. A foolish notion, perhaps, but that doesn't matter, that's what I started out to do. I had on my diamond necklace and I caught up my sable fur and put it on, with a vague thought of covering up the necklace. Not that I feared robbery, but it seemed a sensible thing to do."

"I went straight down our path, and along the road toward the cross-lots cut to the hospital. The Penningtons had left here about ten minutes before I did, and as I crossed the big ravine I thought I saw Mr. and Mrs. Pennington on the bridge over the little ravine. They did not see me, and they were quarreling, or it seemed so to me. Anyway, I didn't think much of it, for they often had tiffs, but as I got nearer, I saw I saw Jim Pennington throw his wife over the bridge rail. There is no doubt about this. I saw it, and I heard her faint cry.

"I went on and came to the bridge where Jim Pennington stood alone."

"You've killed Polly," I cried. "You threw her over into the ravine!"

"Nonsense," he said, "you're dreaming; I did nothing of the sort. Come along with me up to the house and I'll show you Polly there, alive and well."

"I felt dazed, I didn't know what to do, and urged on, in fact he half carried me, I found myself in the Pennington house."

"Where's Polly?" I demanded, for I saw only Rosa, the maid.

"Without a word, Jim picked me up and carried me upstairs. He opened the door of the nursery and put me inside, and came in himself."

"Now, Emily," he said, speaking with perfect calm, "you saw I did push Polly over. Never mind why or how. Are you going to tell?"

"Tell?" I cried. "Of course I'm going to tell! I can't wait to get to some place where I can tell."

He went off, locking the door behind him.

"I was mad more than frightened, and I banged on the door and I yelled and I did all I could to make a racket. Then, about seven, Rosa came up with a tray of dinner. Perfectly good food, but I couldn't eat, of course. I tried to get around Rosa, but she is bound heart and soul to Jim Pennington. She adores him, and either he took her away with him, or she thought he would, I don't know which. Well, she left the tray, and came back for it at eight or so. As I hadn't touched it, she just shrugged her shoulders and went off and left it there."

"That was Thursday, you know. Well, after that, Jim Pennington came to the nursery twice every day, and all he said was to ask me if I had reconsidered and if I would promise not to tell on him until he had time to make his getaway. I refused to do this, naturally, and he went away every time. Rosa brought me meals three times a day and I just stayed there. I didn't know what to do, but I did know that I was not going to promise to shield that murderer! Of that I was positive, no matter what else happened."

"You obstinate little piece!" Abel Collins murmured beneath his breath.

"So the days went by. Of course, I was perfectly comfortable, physically. The nursery has a lovely nurse's bed and all the bathroom appointments are perfect, and there were books about and magazines. And Rosa brought me lovely things to eat."

"Rosa knew all about it, then?" asked Lawlor, who was eagerly listening.

"Oh, yes. Whatever Jim did was perfect in her eyes. Then came the funeral. I knew, because Jim told me. He was most straightforward and casual about it all."

"I'm sorry, Emily," he would say, "that you're so obstinate. You could just as well be at home; and have your wedding as planned and all that—but I cut him off every time and told him the moment I got out of that place, I should go straight to the police with the whole story."

"And you can't keep me here forever," I said.

"And he said, 'Oh, I don't know' in a meaning way that gave me my first feeling of fright. Suppose he should go off—he said he was going away—and leave me there to die! I couldn't make anybody hear. I had tried and tried. I had yelled out of the windows, you know, and the room is between two extensions, so my voice couldn't carry far."

"What a great story!" murmured Stone, as Emily paused for a moment, and was given a refreshing draught by the nurse.

Abel Collins had arrived and also Everett Craven, but Emily seemed not to care what additions were made to her audience. She went ahead with her tale as if she had but the one idea, to get it told.

"So he went away, Jim did, and about half past six, he looked in again to see if I had changed my mind."

"I told him no, I'd sit there till doomsday before I'd do one thing to help him escape punishment for his awful crime. He took it lightly, as he does everything, and

Don't Gamble with Your Sight!

Iritis, a Painful Eye Ailment, Must Be Treated Promptly to Avoid Permanent Trouble

By R. S. COPELAND, M. D.
U. S. Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

WE all know the colored part of the eye is the iris. It is brown, or blue, or black, or gray.

The iris is really a muscle. What appears to be a black patch in the middle is a hole in the iris. This is the "pupil," which varies in size as the muscles and circulation of blood cause it to dilate and contract.

Of course, the iris is subject to disease as is any other muscle. Its most disagreeable ailment is called "Iritis."

In Iritis, or inflammation of this muscle, the most marked symptom is pain. This may be located either in the eyeball, or in the forehead between the brows. There is much watering of the eye and bright lights cause distress.

There is a zone of redness in the "white of the eye," around the iris, together with dimness of vision. The redness gradually spreads until the entire white may become inflamed. The pupil, which normally reacts to light and shade, becomes fixed in Iritis.

This condition requires careful attention in order that the sight may not be affected permanently. Valuable time is sometimes lost by mistaking the trouble for "conjunctivitis," which is an inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the eyelid and covering the eyeball.

Reading, or any close work, must be avoided, and dark glasses may be worn for comfort. But the underlying cause must be cleared up before recovery can be expected.

In the chronic form there may be present some blood disease, tuberculosis, or diabetes. In this case the constitutional disease is probably the cause of the Iritis. Your doctor will institute the necessary general treatment.

But, if the cause is obscure, a search must be made to find where the trouble lies. Chronic constipation, pyorrhea, decayed teeth, abscessed tonsils are all factors in producing the disease.

In the control of this disease I want to emphasize the importance of plenty of rest and relief from nervous excitement. The patient should spend much of the day outdoors and exercise reasonably. But he must be careful to avoid the bright sunlight. The diet should be carefully watched.

In treating Iritis the pupil is kept dilated by the medicine the doctor prescribes. For the relief of the pain, the application of heat, as hot as can be borne, is the most beneficial. Capsicum-vaseline applied to the temple may help to relieve the suffering.

If there is redness of the eye or any pain, be sure to consult your doctor immediately. The trouble is probably not serious, but do not take a chance.

200 AT REUNION IN CHILLICOTHE

The sixth annual Francis family reunion was held in the city park, Sunday, Aug. 3, with over 200 in attendance. The day was most enjoyable with long tables and a string orchestra to furnish the music.

During the business session, Mrs. Goldie Gaines, Kingston R.H., was elected president and W. O. Francis, Chillicothe, was elected secretary-treasurer.

An awarding of prizes was made as follows:

Mother of largest family (11 children), Mrs. Cyrus Francis; fattest man, Edward Francis; man with largest feet, Ralph Francis; tallest man, Ralph Francis; smallest girl over 6, Jane Francis; oldest man, J. W. Francis; largest woman, Mrs. F. Routh; longest hair, Edna Hooper; shortest hair, Bernice Blore; youngest baby, Richard Francis; prettiest girl, Edna Wofford; one coming farthest, Pearl Francis; handsomest man, Jesse Gaines; boy's race, William Gaines; girls' race, Anna May Woodbridge; girls' race, Marvenc Francis; boys' race, Julius Blankenship; girls' race, Wilma Gaines; throwing ball farthest, Virginia Moore.

Miss Thelma Routh and Miss Martin, evangelists, sang and played some gospel songs during the afternoon.

It was decided to hold next year's reunion in the city park, this city, again. W. A. Francis of Kingston will have his orchestra present for the occasion. Plans are already being made to make the occasion better than ever.

Among the relatives were the following:

W. A. Francis, Alice Leasure of Kingston; Luther Arledge of Laurelville; Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Gaines, Paul, William, Wilma and Helen of Kingston R. H.; Mr. and Mrs. Francis, son Herschel, Laurelville; Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Rowe, son Franklin, Columbus; Mrs. Helen Whissler, Harold, and Joan, Chillicothe R. H.; Mr. and Mrs. William H. CLASSIFIED SECTION TO BE CHANGED

Beginning With Wednesday's Paper Ads Will Be Alphabetically Arranged.

Starting with Wednesday's issue of the Circleville Herald the classified section will be arranged in a new manner, for easy reading and quick reference.

All advertisements will be classified under headings which will be alphabetically arranged, and the first word of each advertisement will tell you what the ad is about.

Readers will no longer have to read each ad to find just what they want—and in this way advertisers will get better results than formerly.

Rates have been adjusted so that instead of word-count, line-count will be used. A three-line ad (fifteen words) for one day will be charged at the rate of nine cents a line or 27c for one insertion.

Three insertions of the same advertisement will be printed for the price of two days or 54c. Six insertions of the ad will be published for the price of three days, or 81c.

If the advertisement is ordered for a week, and results are obtained before the ad expires telephone an ad-taker that you want the advertisement discontinued. If the ad has been paid for, you will be given a rebate—if it is a charged ad, your bill will be adjusted, and you will be charged only for the number of days the ad appeared.

Watch for the new classified section of the Herald in Wednesday's issue—and if you have a room for rent, or any household goods for sale, telephone 782 in the morning and get some extra money—you'll get results!

BRIDGE CLUB AT MRS. BOGGS'

In spite of the conversation, turning persistently to the weather, the fact that the temperature was appallingly hot, the members of the bridge club of Mrs. John Boggs took advantage of all her plans to keep cool Monday night, when she entertained them at her home.

The rooms were kept delightful, for the bridge game which was finished with the awarding of the club prize to Mrs. R. R. Bales. Mrs. George Littleton will be the club's next hostess.

BLAME REDS FOR CAPTURE OF CHANGSHA

State Department Says Army of Communists Pave Way for Onslaught.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—An army of "Communists," working secretly within the city, prepared the way for the Red onslaught and capture of Changsha, capital of Hunan province, China, official messages to the state department declared today.

It was their work, which had been going on for months, that simplified the rout of Ho Chien's Nationalist troops, the reports stated. A number of defectors in his troops were reported.

Reports from consular officials to the department advised Changsha was still burning, and that, although the majority of the Red invaders had left the city, systematic looting was being carried on.

Continued pillaging prompted the American minister in Peiping to dispatch a formal note to the Nankin foreign affairs minister in Changsha and reiterating America's stand that this country would "reserve all rights" in Chinese territory.

The note to the minister requested relief measures designed to furnish a prompt check on the destruction of American property still in the vicinity of Changsha.

Official reports to the department advised that some American mission property in China was destroyed, but that Standard Oil company installations and property remained intact. The gunboat Palos which effected the evacuation of Changsha when the Red troops entered the city was reported back at its station near Changsha.

All throughout the "Red" zone, American officials have for the third time in recent weeks warned Americans to evacuate, pointing out that low water in the rivers might make impossible evacuation of interior sections speedily.

Preparing for the possibility of further invasion, Richard P. Butrick, American consul at Hankow has requested the U. S. S. Monocacy to investigate and compile a list of Americans at Kuling, summer resort.

The arc of naval vessels stretching around China waters remained in station, with no additions today, and with none in view unless further outbreaks ensue.

TO HAVE PICNIC AUGUST 15th

Where Montcalm Died

One of the landmarks of Lower Town (the old part of the city of Quebec) is the little cigar store on St. Louis street, once the residence of a Doctor's house, where the French commander, Montcalm, mortally wounded in the battle of the Plains of Abraham, was brought, and where he died. His remains were buried in a hole in the wall of the Ursuline convent chapel.

BE IMPATIENT, FOLKS— COME ON IN NOW!

Just toss those inhibitions out of the window. Just let yourself go. Because we know there's a limit to all patience—as a matter of fact we're getting pretty g-a-g ourselves. As a matter of fact, who wouldn't be? with Free Coal in the magazines, Free Coal on the radio, Free Coal in the newspapers, Free Coal on tire covers, and goodness knows, what all.

We know that the Free Coal Campaign doesn't open officially until Saturday, but waiting until Saturday is out! We know when we're licked. And if you feel that you can't wait, that you want to lay $2.00 on the best heating opportunity ever offered: that you want Summer warmth in your home next Winter with a genuine Estate Heatrola; that you want a supply of Free Coal for making your purchase this month—why, don't hold back.

Be as impatient as we are—come in today. You won't ever regret it. And you can tell your friends that as far as we're concerned, the Free Coal Campaign is on right now!

Other manufacturers have tried to imitate the Heatrola; other retail stores have tried to imitate the Free Coal Campaign. But there's one thing to remember when you get your Free Coal—there is only one Heatrola. It has the Intensi-Fire Air Duct, an exclusive device which captures and utilizes heat, which, in ordinary heaters, goes to waste—up the chimney. That's just one of the features of the genuine Heatrola. There are lots more. We'll show them to you. But no one else will, for we are sole distributors for the Estate Heatrola in this district.

If your floors need a new covering—we'd like awfully to show you the new Quaker Rugs. New, beautiful patterns, but the same old wearing qualities which have been companions in Quaker Rugs in the past.

TUNE IN ON WLW, Friday at 9.30 (E. S. T.) For Honey and Richard and their friends will be back, all rested up from their Summer vacation, with a host of new songs, accompanied by the Heatrola Orchestra. It looks like a big reunion and we hope you'll all be there.

Chemistry Professor: "What can you tell me about nitrates?" Student: "Well—er—they're a lot cheaper than day rates."

The great PYROFAX endurance contest, over at New Holland, is still on. This is the end of the FIFTEENTH WEEK. Will it run another week and make it four months on one tank? We'll wait and see. Right now Mrs. White's cost per meal is only .0444, 1332 per day, or 9324 per week. There is no odor nor smoke in her kitchen, nor does she have to wait for it to generate heat. It's always ready. Why not look into this new fuel for those living beyond gas mains? It's first cost is low and the pleasure of using it is great.

There is an intimate relationship between science and business. Where would the suspender business be if it were not for the law of gravitation?

Baking, roasting, broiling, canning—it makes no difference to the results you'll get in an Estate Gas range with Fresh Air Oven. Mrs. C. W. (Cotton) Clark has just joined the ranks of satisfied users, and now she tells us she would never be content with any other kind.

Before you go on that August vacation, assure yourself and your family of a vacation from heating worries this Winter, by signing up for FREE COAL!

HOMER HANDY'S HINT
Scratches on mahogany or walnut furniture can be removed by applying iodine and then polishing with a soft cloth.

"Boy, you'd better watch out or you'll lose control of this bus!" "You said it. I'm four payments behind right now."

Mrs. Luther Churtz, who lives on the John H. Carmean farm on the Williamsport pike, had us install a Pyrofax Gas Outfit, with an Estate gas range, in her home recently. She was undecided about buying the outfit until she talked with Mrs. Cary Brown, a user. And now, Mrs. Churtz, although living in the country with gas mains several miles away, is cooking and baking with gas just like city dwellers. And we'll bet that she is mighty glad that she purchased an Estate gas range with insulated oven. This new type of oven keeps the cook cool in more ways than one. It's a wonder to us that any woman would cook and bake if she had to do it with a coal range in the "good old summer time." Of course, there's gasoline and kerosene stoves, but they are not always satisfactory.

And while we are thinking of Pyrofax, we might mention that we have installed this gas in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Tegardin, up in Madison-twp, for heating water in their new home. Can you imagine it—a country home miles from a gas line have a water heater using gas as a fuel?

When upholstered living room suites first came out, it was nothing to sell a mohair suite of three pieces for $300 to $400. Today, if you'll drop down to our store and look into our east window, you'll see a beautiful suite (3 pieces) 100% angora mohair (No 22 wool) for a small sum of $137.50 (cash—slightly higher if charged). Here's an opportunity to buy a brand new style suite, of guaranteed construction at a low price. It's a special from the factory, and a special price from us. It's lower in price than many Ja-guard covered suites.

Don't forget—we've opened our books for orders for Heatrolas for delivery this fall and winter and there's FREE COAL in it for you, if you'll place your order in August.

The SEA BRIDE

Sails the Sea of Life!

SHE encounters storms—emotional crises that are the direct result of her being the only woman aboard a whaling boat. She learns that the witchery of the sea can be malevolent as well as romantic. She sees men in the raw, their souls bared by the elemental forces that play upon them.

BE IMPATIENT, FOLKS—COME ON IN NOW!

Just toss those inhibitions out of the window. Just let yourself go. Because we know there's a limit to all patience—as a matter of fact we're getting pretty gaga ourselves. As a matter of fact, who wouldn't be? with Free Coal in the magazines, Free Coal on the radio, Free Coal in the newspapers, Free Coal on the billboards, Free Coal on tire covers, and goodness knows, what all.

We know that the Free Coal Campaign doesn't open officially until Saturday, but waiting until Saturday is out! We know when we're licked. And if you feel that you can't wait; that you want to lay $2.00 on the best heating opportunity ever offered; that you want Summer warmth in your home next Winter with a genuine Estate Heatrola; that you want a supply of Free Coal for making your purchase this month—why, don't hold back.

Be as impatient as we are—come in today. You won't ever regret it. And you can tell your friends that as far as we're concerned, the Free Coal Campaign is on right now!

Other manufacturers have tried to imitate the Heatrola; other retail stores have tried to imitate the Free Coal Campaign. But there's one thing to remember when you get your Free Coal—there is only one Heatrola. It has the Intensi-Fire Air Duct, an exclusive device which captures and utilizes heat, which, in ordinary heaters, goes to waste—up the chimney. That's just one of the features of the genuine Heatrola. There are lots more. We'll show them to you. But no one else will, for we are sole distributors for the Estate Heatrola in this district.

If your floors need a new covering—we'd like awfully to show you the new Quaker Rugs. New, beautiful patterns, but the same old wearing qualities which have been companions in Quaker Rugs in the past.

TUNE IN ON WLW, Friday at 9:30 (E. S. T.) For Honey and Richard and their friends will be back, all rested up from their Summer vacation, with a host of new songs, accompanied by the Heatrola Orchestra. It looks like a big reunion and we hope you'll all be there.

Chemistry Professor: "What can you tell me about nitrates?" Student: "Well—they're a lot cheaper than day rates."

The great PYROFAX endurance contest, over at New Holland, is still on. This is the end of the FIFTEENTH WEEK. Will it run another week and make it four months on one tank? We'll wait and see. Right now Mrs. White's cost per meal is only .0444, .1332 per day, or .9324 per week. There is no odor nor smoke in her kitchen, nor does she have to wait for it to generate heat. It's always ready. Why not look into this new fuel for those living beyond gas mains? It's first cost is low and the pleasure of using it is great.

There is an intimate relationship between science and business. Where would the suspender business be if it were not for the law of gravitation?

Baking, roasting, broiling, canning—it makes no difference to the results you'll get in an Estate Gas range with Fresh Air Oven. Mrs. C. W. (Cotton) Clark has just joined the ranks of satisfied users, and now she tells us she would never be content with any other kind.

Before you go on that August vacation, assure yourself and your family of a vacation from heating worries this Winter, by signing up for FREE COAL!

HOMER HANDY'S HINT Scratches on mahogany or walnut furniture can be removed by applying iodine and then polishing with a soft cloth.

When upholstered living room suites first came out, it was nothing to sell a mohair suite of three pieces for $300 to $400. Today, if you'll drop down to our store and look into our east window, you'll see a beautiful suite (3 pieces) 100% angora mohair (No synthetic wool) for a small sum of $137.50 (cash—slightly higher if charged). Here's an opportunity to buy a brand new style suite, of guaranteed construction at a low price. It's a special from the factory, and a special price from us. It's lower in price than many Jacquard covered suites.

Don't forget—we've opened our books for orders for Heatrolas for delivery this fall and winter and there's FREE COAL in it for you, if you'll place your order in August.

The SEA BRIDE

Sails the Sea of Life!

SHE encounters storms—emotional crises that are the direct result of her being the only woman aboard a whaling boat. She learns that the witchery of the sea can be malevolent as well as romantic. She sees men in the raw, their souls bared by the elemental forces that play upon them.

THE SEA BRIDE is

A Love Story

A Sea Story

An Action Story!

by Ben Ames Williams

ONLY Williams can keep a story of this kind from becoming melodrama. His noted artistry makes it a poignant story of romance such as might be encountered by any woman under similar circumstances. Yet it is a story for both men and women.
